

Reflection 7

20 pts - This weeks topic is important for teamwork because understanding your limitations and the limitations helps set healthy expectations for teamwork. Unrealistic expectations and overconfidence always lead to disappointments and missed deadlines. Its good to have expectations to live up to but when they are unrealistic they let everyone in the team down.

10 pts - A smart goal I have for next week is to show up for class. My job has been making it hard to show up working until 2 AM so im setting a SMART goal that I can try to attain.

10 pts - Something that I would do differently next week is just be more dedicated to my studies. With my job taking up so much of my free time i've been focusing much less on my schooling in the free time that I have left. I just need to have a better attitude towards work and doing my work. Nothing bad is going to happen if I sit down for an hour or two before its time to go into my job and work on my homework so I don't get behind. It will take weight off my back to be caught up on my work and will make me happier in the long run.

20 pts - I know that this may seem like such a bare minimum answer but I want to contribute more to my team by being in class. I haven't contributed anything recently and I really want to show up for my team.

20 pts - A simple way to relate this to the gospel is that being humble is a christ like trait that will help you in your relationship as well as in the workplace. Its better to always be striving to be more christlike than to be confident that you are already christlike enough.

20 pts - I taught my friend Austin that most people underestimate deadlines when giving estimates out for their work to be completed under. He said that he could probably guess that was true and had probably done it in the past.
