

Reflection 8

20 - This weeks topic is important for teamwork because disagreeing is an important part of brainstorming and creating good solutions and great products. It comes down to communication because if your disagree with some one but don't let them know, your disagreement will just negatively effect your relationship with them and your team. Letting your opinions known gives an opportunity for ideas to better suit both sides or for one side to better explain their stance.

20 - This experience relates to an experience I had leading a boy scout troop through Philmont New Mexico. I always let my disagreements with my adult Leaders be known. It usually let us come to some sort of agreement very quickly. Either my objection got taken into account and we did something differently or he explained why he did something a certain way. It was beneficial for the group as a whole and I didnt have to talk behind his back about my disagreements.

20 - I taught my friend Austin Richards about how in the professional computer science world disagreeing is looked upon well. He said that the reasoning for why it is a good thing makes a lot of sense but in the business world it is more heavily frowned upon because people in lower positions are fully expected to comply with exactly what their higher ups ask of them. He said he learned that he likes the computer science business world more than the standards business world.

20 - Relating this to the gospel, expressing your doubts to your church leaders is very benifitial as it allows them address them. If spiritual doubts just stay inside they can fester and lead to disbelief but when addressed and dispelled they will make a testimony much stronger than it was before. The hole that was where the doubt was gets replaced with faith and a stronger testimony comes out of it.

20 - I feel that I have a very unique perspective in many ways. My spiritual beliefs are very different than many of my classmates and I place much more value and focus onto art and music. If I can work with my team I want to contribute my unique perspective to disagree with them and provide unique ideas that they wouldn't come up with themselves.
